The Japan Mail then goes on to being severely boycotted by members of the argue that in this connection the word trades unions and other citizens. These are the or not based on a theological system opposed to Christianity. It is further contended that Japan's laws and her judicial procedure are in no way based upon or subservient to a theological system, and that in everything that concerns this question of quim Basto, Jr., obtained 163 votes; Franher right to demand repair of the breach in her sovereign power she is just as much " une I stancio da Silva, 171; Luia Joao Baptista, 151. tern state. From these arguments the con- Fernandes, Aleino Antonio Sauvage, and Anclusion is drawn that extraterritoriality in Japan is opposed to international law. But international law is an uncertain thing, and is especially uncertain in respect of this particular subject. Our contemporary says "no other pretext has ever been advanced, or could properly be advanced, for insisting that the jurisdiction of an independent state shall not extend to every one residing within its territorities," than that its institutions and laws are part and parcel of a peculiar Mr. A. J. Leach, Acting Puisne Judge. theological system. We are not aware that the pretext has ever been thus formulated before. Where a nation has been desirous ofextending protection to its subjects abroad, resignation to the Council, and that it is very and has not been satisfied with the Government of the country where they resided, it has, when strong enough, set up an extraterritorial jurisdiction. It is true that the earliest extraterritorial capitulations were made by or imposed on Mussulman powers, but that is no reason why the same prin- ready mentioned for the vacancy, but an opinion ciple should not be applied to other non-Christian powers, as it has been. Our contemporary is on firmer ground when he argues that the facts which warranted extraterritoriality in Japan have ceased to exist re-established. The progress made by Japan has been such as to-warrant the granting On Saturday and Sunday there were soirées at to her, under suitable guarantees for its Macao at the Club Uniso and at the Gremio in equitable administration, of a fuller jurisdicthe existing treaties. But even the Japan Mail admits that the circumstances of Japan | tary Band was also in attendance. do not fully satisfy Western standards. "Her manner of administering the law leaves much to be desired, and her new civil codes Lyons, the well-known traveller and savant, codes, however, have, says our contemporary, required to show that her judiclary is up to to their own showing, Western powers have no right to exact. It should suffice for them that the country's codes of law and legal procedure are consistent with the principles of Western jurisprudence." Western powers, however, will require semething more than this. The matter is one of arrangement between the parties, and as in all such cases, where there is no independent tribunal to appeal to, the stronger party is able to impose conditions. When Western powers are satisfied that the laws and the constitution of the courts of Japan ensure the equitable treatment of foreigners, inasmuch as there was immediate need of Mr. they may be content to surrender their Trench's services at Berlin. Mr. Robert Louis Stevenson has at last been heard from, a letter dated the 28th of July, at Nuka-Hiva, stating that the yacht Casco, about five weeks out from San Francisco, had just arrived there and that all on board were fairly well and that the yacht was anchored in a beautiful hay: Mr. Stevenson often goes ashore, walks, talks to the natives, whom he finds courteous and good-hearted and splendid-looking fellows. He writes every day, and is in much better health than when he was in the Adirondacks. The Casco was to remain for two or three weeks at this point and then visit Taichae, where the Stevensons proposed to spend a few days. From there they intended to sail to Hiva Oa, the great tattooing island, whence they expected to sail to the Tahiti Islands. Mr. Stevens in is writing a series of letters descriptive of his experiences and observations on this cruise

The question of tips is at length to be serious. ly grappled with. A German psychologist bas taken it in hand, and has a natractor in elaborate plan for its solution. Tipping, in the view of [ this sente person, is a hum in waxness, a deficiency of moral courage very similar to tippling; and should be dealt within the same way. Accordingly, he has projected an Association of Anti-l'ippers -a kind of union of total abstainers from tipping—the members of which will be required to sign a pledge promising to give no more tips to waiters, servants, and other persons of this class. The headquarters of the association are at Chemnitz, and although its constitution is not yet finally settled a badge for its members has been resolved on. This is not to be worn, like the temperance badge, where it can be readily seen, but is to be produced from the packet whenever waiters show a tendency to linger. The momentous question is in the grip of a master mind. Chiming in with the news of colliery strikes and the threatenings of a rise in the price of coal comes an article in the Times raising the question, "Is there coal under-London?" The question has been approached in connection with borings for water in several parts of London; and it now appears that it might well be solved if scientific ardour and business enterprise conjointly would provide funds to continue a boring by the Vauxball Water Company at Streatham. The hole has been driven down through various formations to a depth of 1.095 feet by the company for their own immediate purposes: but it see as likely that it will not be worth their while to take it any further. It would certainly be satisfactory to have the question settled once for all. Fancy the effect of discovering that we were living over a coal-field! And how would the coal dues which are levied on coal coming into London fare when Londoners began to rake it up from under their own cellars, so to speak?
